"Avances y desafíos de la Geología en Argentina"

Since its founding, this city has been called "San Luis de Loyola Nueva Medina de Río Seco", in homage to San Luis, the King of France and to the founders of the city. The settlement of the colony was modified for various reasons, being its last foundation recognized on August 25, 1594, which coincides with the central area of Plaza Independencia, and where the Superior Court of Justice of the Province currently operates (former Provincial Government House). The imprint of the founding period can be observed in its Spanish colonial architecture, which is reflected in many of its buildings and historic squares.

In 1981, the City of San Luis hosted the VIII Argentine Geological Congress; since then, the contributions in geoscience research have been outstanding in different fields of the scientific community.
